Paragraph-1: The Internet connects many computers all over the world through varied means. Getting on to the Internet is also known as going on-line. Some people use modems to go on-line. If you are using the Internet at home you probably have a modem that connects you to the Internet. Big companies and some schools use a really big network of wires also known as Ethernet to connect to the Internet. Ethernet is faster than modems and can control hundreds of computers all at once. However, it depends on the user to adopt any way for connecting to the internet.

Answer:

Question-2: Underline at-least two major Supporting details. (0.5+0.5)

Paragraph-2: Dogs and wolves are part of the same animal family. Both animals have strong senses of smell and are loyal to their packs. But dogs and wolves are quite different when it comes to people. Dogs are used to living with people and get along well with them. In fact, dogs have been called "man's best friend." Wolves, on the other hand, cannot live with humans. Wolves prefer to live in the wild, where they can hunt for their food. Clearly, dogs belong with people, while wolves do not.

Question-2: Underline at-least two major Supporting details. (0.5+0.5)

Paragraph-3: Recycling things like paper, plastic, and metal helps the earth by cutting down on trash. Yet many people throw away their newspapers, bottles, and cans instead of recycling them. The question, then, is how to encourage more people to recycle. One way that works is to put recycling containers in more places. Seeing more recycling bins helps people remember to use them. Another way is to teach people why recycling is important. If we make recycling easier and teach people why it matters, more people will join in.
